Washington, December 3.

The President's Message has been received with many expressions of gratification by the Democratic and conservative Republican members of Congress.

In the Senata, it was sneered at by Chas. Summer, and in the House pronounced by Thad. Stevens as not equal in ability to a second-rate lecture. By the unprejudiced masses, it is regarded as a dignified, able, statesmanlike document, cauncialing great principles, and, without descending to details, bying down the fundamental law in reference to all the great political topics of the hour.

reference to all the great political topics of the hour.

As was long ago predicted by this correspondent, Mr. Joinson declares unequivocally that none of the States have ever been out of the Union, and that each State has a right to regulate for itself the qualifications for suffrage; that the independence of the States is as essential as the accepting of the Federal Government, to the maintenance of a regulation for correspond maintenance of a republican Government, and that Congress has the right to judge of the election, returns and qualifications of members.

This language is considered as peculiarly significant, when contrasted with Thad. Stevens' caucus resolutions, which assume that Congress has the right to inquire into the existence of the States. The tenor of the message, that the restoration to a loyal status to the States heretofore decided to be in insurrection, is the proper prerogative of the Executive, and that Congress has no of the Executive, and that Congress has no right to look beyond the election returns and qualifications of its own members.

With regard to our British complications the language of the President is regarded as at least strong, if not menacing; but in reference to Mexican affairs it is constructed into "Let us wait a while." Upon the whole, the message is regarded generally as making open issue with the radicals of the Sunner-Stevens stripe, and has given great encouragement to the genuine Johnson men.
